from pollution, from the quilted gray air hanging over L.A. to the alarming rise in asthma, it can be seriously unpleasant. Now the science shows that pollution is also aging one's skin. "It's in minuscule particles and liquids so tiny that they lodge in pores and destroy skin's natural oils," says a New York dermatologist, Denton. "It creates free radicals and leads to collagen breakdown and irritation." These toxins also cause skin treatment products from penetrating. In Manhattan's East Village, to Hampstead, is 80 percent of the world's population that exceeds the World Health Organization's guidelines.

cancers. That's why you want to cleanse in a way that matters from your pores. "If you don't wash your face, you're not allowing skin's natural repair mechanisms to do their job," says a facialist to radiant A-listers like Jennifer Lopez. The result? Puffier eyes, darker circles, and an increasing number of options, from microdermabrasion to sonic cleansing brushes, that get even the tiniest pores receptive to antiaging serums. Choose wisely. Among the latest innovations are a makeup remover and toner in one that help to grab on to debris and wash it away," explains Dr. Dennis P. Fitzpatrick, a Washington, D.C., dermatologist. The cleanser, which contains no soap, is applied to dry skin and wiped off with a cotton ball, making them ideal for sensitive types. Try La Roche-Posay Physiologic Micellar Solution ($21) or Garnier Micellar Lotion Cleanser ($20). Cleansing balms, with a rich texture that melts on contact, have a large cult following. "They are particularly good for dry or aging complexions," says Amanda Lacey, an in-demand London facialist. "Warm a bean-size bit of balm in your hands, massage it in, and then remove it with a damp cloth for gentle exfoliation." The balm squad is
